This is from the Angel of Mercy. Actually this piece is part of an array of 22 photographs and some other figures of (inaudible) which I portrayed (inaudible) nurse as a profession for women in the Crimean War, and these are photographs done in the style of the 1850s. It was actually the first war we photographed, but unlike the American civil war with Mathew Brady, when they had disasters, it was done mostly for advertising how happy these soldiers were. And it had to document the – as I said, there are 22 of these photographs out there. But this is the Angel of Mercy. Now, I left out one or two. There are actually – this is done in black and white, the original is actually a wonderful type of sepia silver (inaudible) which is really looks like the old days.

Could you show the next? This is in the trenches before Sevastopol, and I think it's (inaudible) also. Next please.
